State Cannabis Public Health Policy Guide

October 2023

Overview

Each year more states establish adult use cannabis programs. At present, 23 states have approved adult use cannabis programs. Included within ASAM’s policy statement on Cannabis is a set of public health recommendations to guide states that decide to authorize adult use cannabis programs. The exact recommendations can be found listed on the next page.

In this guide, you will see a state-by-state breakdown of where existing adult use cannabis programs stand in comparison to ASAM’s policy recommendations. The states of Minnesota and Delaware are not included in this chart as they are the most recent states to approve adult use programs, and their regulations are still being formed. On the chart, each state will score a yes, no, or somewhat for their status on each ASAM policy recommendation.

Scoring ‘somewhat’ means that the state may have parts of the policy in place but not the complete recommendation. The intent of this guide is to provide advocates in states where cannabis is legal for adult use with comprehensive information about specific public policies so they can identify shortcomings and advocate for change.

ASAM’s Public Policy Statement on Cannabis states that in cases of cannabis used for non-medical purposes

“States or jurisdictions that decide to legalize cannabis production, distribution or sale should only do so within a strong public health-based regulatory framework that minimizes the harms related to legalization. These should include best public health practices established for tobacco control, and components which have been identified as important for minimizing harmful use of tobacco or alcohol.”
